

In any business, employees need to collaborate to be productive – whether in the office, at home, or on the road. To stay competitive, companies must provide their employees with the tools, technologies and applications they need to work, collaborate and stay connected from virtually anywhere, at any time, on any device.

Attract - and Retain - The Best Employees

To attract the best job candidates, companies must enable employees to work outside of the organization's geographical footprint. And that means giving remote workers the tools, technologies and applications they need to communicate seamlessly and securely with colleagues, customers, partners and vendors – regardless of location, time of day or device.

Enhance and Expand the Interview Process

Interviewing job candidates usually involves traveling to or from a company's headquarters or setting up a series of conference calls – both timely and costly endeavors. Relying on travel and phone calls also make it more difficult for organizations to schedule multiple employees to engage with a candidate directly, and in a timely manner. This makes it difficult for organizations to interview multiple candidates – which inherently limits the prospective candidate pool that the organization would consider for a position.

Evolve the Training Experience

Rolling out employee training activities typically requires employees to travel to and from company headquarters. Or it necessitates company trainers traveling to multiple office locations. To avoid these significant expenses, some organizations opt to livestream training sessions across multiple fixed company locations. However, this approach tends to leave little opportunity for remote workers to actively participate in the training, making it feel like more like a "one-way broadcast' than an interactive training session.
